DESTROYER STOPS SHIP CARRYING CONTRABAND.

10,900 Feet Of Copper Cable Found Hidden On Norwegian Steamer.

New York July 14.—A United States torpedo boat destroyer overhauled and brought back to this port to-day the Norwegian steamship Conrad Mohr, aboard which the Federal authorities seized 10,900 feet of copper cable, contraband of war, found secreted in an oil tank.

The captain, Peter Einarson and his chief engineer, John Larsen, were arraigned before a United States commissioner on a charge of conspiring to defraud the Government by filing a false manifest.

Customs agents had been warned that the Conrad Mohr was to carry contraband. A search at the pier disclosed nothing. Off Staten Island, however, the ship was seen to anchor and after she resumed her voyage the war vessel gave chase. Before the oil tanker reached Sandy Hook she was overtaken and a deputy customs collector lowered a boat hook into a tank and pulled up an end of the hidden wire.

Einarson and Larsen were held in $25,000 bail each.

PERSHING'S MEN TO BE PAID IN FRENCH MONEY

Washington, July 15.—American soldiers sent to France will not be paid in gold or American currency, the War Department announced to-night, but will be given their choice of French money at current exchange rates or a check which can be mailed home or cashed as desired.

For execution of the plan a large credit has been established abroad, and the American Government will draw upon it as needed. This, it was pointed out, will preclude any possibility of the Germans making or capturing money on its way to cash pay warrants.

A Story of the Spanish Armada

By ELINOR MARSH

Traveling one summer in Ireland, I stopped at a farmhouse on Donegal bay. The farmer and his wife looked like other people of Irish descent, except that the mother did not have the clear, peachy Irish complexion, while the children were brunettes. I remarked to the farmer upon this dark skin of his children, whereupon he told me that there was Spanish blood in their veins. Going to a desk, he took out a manuscript and handed it to me. It was written in a woman's hand on parchment and evidently was very old. I was sufficiently interested in it to take a copy of it. Here it is:

It was midsummer, 1588, when one morning I was picking berries in the field and stopped to rest. Looking out over the bay, I saw a ship. Scattered here and there far and near were other ships. One of them was so close to the shore that I could see the standard she bore, and it was a strange one. The ship, which was a large one and with portholes for guns, was coming into the harbor. Her foremast was gone, and what sails she carried were in tatters.

This was the year of the famous Spanish armada. We in the north of Ireland had heard something about the Spaniards intending to invade England, but we got little news from a land so far away, and we had not heard that they had sailed up the English channel; that there had been a running fight; that many of the Spanish ships had been wrecked in a storm, that the rest, cut off from returning to Spain over the course they had come, had sailed to the northward of the Orkney Islands and were coming southward around the west coast of Ireland to get back home.

This ship I saw came into port evidently in distress. We had no means of defending ourselves. Indeed, we needed no defense, for the ship came in only to make such repairs as might enable her to make the voyage back to Spain.

I went down to the shore, where I watched a boat coming from the ship. It landed near where I stood, and the sailors carried a man wrapped in blankets on to the beach and laid him on the sand. The sun was shining, and the sand was warm and not hard to lie upon. The sailors left the man, returned to their boat and pulled back to the ship.

I went to the man and looked down upon him. His eyes were closed; but, hearing me, he opened them. He was no doubt very ill or much reduced from exposure. He spoke a little English and told me that he had been wounded fighting in the English channel. The rolling of the ship greatly injured him, and he had begged his comrades to take him ashore. If not rescued by some landsman he would prefer to die there rather than on ship board.

He seemed greatly relieved to be lying where he was, so I left him to go to the house and tell father and mother about him. I took back to him some milk, which he drank and seemed to relish. Father was not minded to save a hated Spaniard from death, but at last I prevailed upon him to go with me to the stranger, and when father saw him and that he was very young and well favored he would have carried him to the house, but the invalid preferred to remain where he was so long as the sun shone upon him and the breeze fanned his cheek.

But when evening came he was removed to our house, where I gave him some bread and honey for supper, and he was laid upon a bed and at once fell into a sleep from which he did not awaken till the next day at noon. The first question he asked was whether the ship that had brought him had sailed, and when told that it had he was much cast down, for he said that he felt much stronger and would have returned to Spain in her.

These things he communicated partly in English words and partly by signs. No one except myself could understand him, so whenever he wished to communicate anything he did it through me. I nursed him and prepared his meals for him, and he would not permit any one else to do anything for him.

By the time he had recovered a Spanish ship that had been wrecked, but had been repaired, was ready to sail for Spain, and the Spaniard sent word to her commander that he would go with him as one of the crew. A boat was sent for him, and he bade goodby to father and mother and the children. I went with him to the place where the boat was waiting for him. But we never reached it. Looking down from an eminence upon the boat, I tried to permit him to go to it, but could not, nor could he leave me. We remained where we were, and when the night was coming on the sailors pulled away and left us.

I have written this that my children and my children's children may know how I came about that the blood of Spain and Ireland was mingled in them at the time of the great armada. My husband has long ago renounced his allegiance to the king of Spain and is now a lawful subject of King James. One thing has tended to balance the difference in blood—we are both of the same religion, being of the true and only Catholic church.

The farmer told me that the narrator of the episode was his grandmother many generations back. The offspring of the pair were girls alone, so the Spanish name was lost.

Did You Ever Pay a Bill Twice

The one who has not had to pay more than one bill the second time is the exception and not the rule. Few people when paying a bill ask for a receipt and if they do they fail to keep the receipt. Did you ever have a dispute over a payment? Unpleasant is it not? Do you wish the circumstance to occur again? There is one sure way to escape it. Pay your bills with checks. If you received no interest on your idle money it would only show good sense and good wisdom to have it in a BANK. Transact your business in a business way and pay your bills by checks. Your check when returned to you makes an indisputable receipt. A bank account makes you systematic and encourages you to save part of your income. Many a man has become rich because he became interested in watching his bank balance, and was thus led to find ways to increase it. Start a BANK ACCOUNT with US and WE will help you make it larger. Why not begin TO-DAY.
